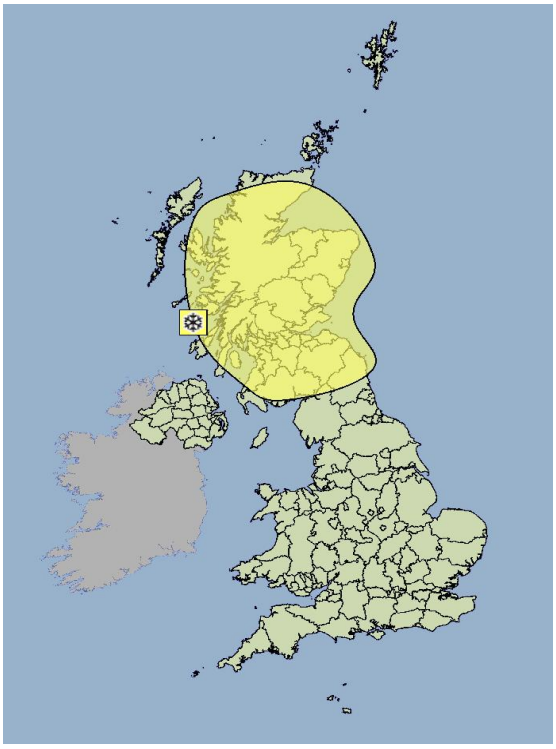
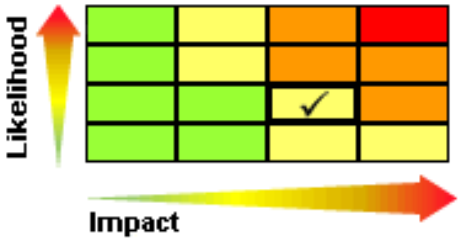
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deepening area of low pressure is expected to track east across the UK during Wednesday night and into Thursday. Across parts of the north, a spell of persistent and perhaps heavy snow may develop. This could see 3-8 cm of snow accumulate in places with up to 20 cm over high ground. There is still significant uncertainty regarding the extent and location of any heavy snowfall, at this stage parts of northern and central Scotland appear most at risk.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 18:00 on Wed, 17th Jan 2018 until 09:00 on Thu, 18th Jan 2018

Snow showers are expected during Wednesday evening before a spell of more persistent and possibly heavy snow develops in places during Wednesday night. Any persistent snow is most likely to clear east before dawn on Thursday but further snow showers are likely to follow.

Travel delays are possible on roads with a risk that some vehicles and passengers could become stranded. Delays or cancellations are possible to rail and air travel. Some rural communities could become cut off. Power cuts may occur and other services, such as mobile phone, may be affected.
